The wild party in Georgia

Pam Durban

ATLANTA -- The 3:30 a.m. moods alternating through the Carter victory party crowd were close to those of a ritzy singles bar on a good night, rock concerts on a bad night and "Clockwork Orange" anytime. Each time the crowd stirred, startling figures from the collective unconscious would drop into the center of the action.

Like the peanut man. He was thin and black; he meandered through the crowd wearing an upended peanut plant for a hat. The roots, still clotted with red clay stood straight up, vines and peanuts almost hid his face. A dozen more peanut plants hung from his belt, the dried vines swinging around his knees, the peanuts rattling with each step.

A man in a Nixon mask pushed through the front row crowds; he smiled and waved victory signs. Angry Carterites demanded that he take off the mask, but still he crept through the Democratic throng declaring, "I'm innocent, I'm innocent, you can depend on me."

Santa Claus wandered through.

It had been a long night at the Carter-Mondale victory bash, the biggest cocktail party ever given in Georgia, maybe in the South. I had no plans to go. Just like I had no plans to vote. But at the last minute, with my memory of the rancor and despair of the last election fading and the thought of four more years of Gerald Ford growing too vivid, I went to the polls and became a citizen again. And when friends offered a free $100 ticket to the victory party, I accepted. After all, I had invested a vote in the history which would begin there.

The partying crowd at Atlanta's World Congress Center grew to 25,000 early in the evening. By 9 p.m. the fire marshall had closed the building, stranding thousands outside. To get some idea of the size of the crowd within you need to understand that the Carolina Coliseum could easily be displayed inside this building, leaving plenty of room for people to walk around and admire it. Three levels of the cavernous new trade center had been rented for the victory party; the ground floor was open to the public while the upper levels were reserved for $100 ticket holders, celebrities and the press.

A friend and I decided immediately to devote some time to a search for celebrities, weirdos and distinguished members of the national press corps, although we realized that the distinctions between the groups would blur considerably as the night wore on. We also decided, as an exercise in national racial memory, to be alert for potential assassins. Our lone assassin profile included: foreign ancestry (or the wearing of foreign-made shoes), windbreakers or too-rumpled trenchcoats (in Atlanta everyone wears trenchcoats and tries to appear mysterious; our criteria was too rumpled, too shabby), being obviously alone in the crowd and smiling at no one often, and wearing the hair short yet strangely unarranged. During the evening we spotted several individuals who met the criteria.

We failed to spot any certifiable celebrities, but our

Gracious interval

John Adams didn't wait for the inaugural after Jefferson beat him for the presidency; when the day came he slipped out of the brand new White House and the drab little capital in his coach at four in the morning. Fourteen days later he reached Quincy, Massachusetts having, as he wrote, "trotted the bogs five hundred miles." He couldn't bear the chagrin of seeing his rival sworn in, and Jefferson walked quietly over to the Capitol from Conrad's boarding house to take the oath by himself. That was 1801.

We like the gracious things President Ford and President-elect Carter are saying to each other now. It makes us all a little taller. On January 20 the two of them will ride up Pennsylvania Avenue between crowds and you won't know by their faces what mean things the President was recently saying about his rival, or that Carter called Ford "weak, timid, vacillating and unable to lead." They will preserve this courtesy because they are gentlemen. And because they love their country

The late, great managing editor of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, O.K. Bovard, once instructed a brash young Washington correspondent who was writing flippantly about such another inaugural ride, "Young man, when you write about that I want you to lift your hat!" He explained that the ride represented one of the better things in our democracy. Looking back on it all we can't see that the campaign issues were drowned in trivialities as some assert. Arthur Schlesinger, Jr. had a hard time of it; in the end he voted for Carter, he reported, but exclaimed in The Wall Street Journal, "what an abysmal, demeaning, offensive, empty campaign on both their parts. What a hell of a way to celebrate the Bicentennial!"

Presidential candidates have a language of their own; it is true that Carter and Ford are hardly charismatic figures, but experience has taught politicians that it is unwise to sharpen the issues too much. Nixon said almost nothing in 1972 and got a landslide from McGovern, who tried to be specific; so did Stevenson and Goldwater-they got clobbered, too. Our system puts a premium on ambiguity.

One encouraging aspect was the kneejerk reaction from the stock market when Carter won. Wall Street seemed to have understood the election. We had gone out the day before and voted for the man who promised never to lie, mislead or deceive us, and wondered if after all there was any real difference between the candidates. The next day the stock market had a gratifying tizzy and dropped nine points. Not that we want the market to fall, but we have never known a time when Wall Street knew where its bread was buttered; Mr. Ford and his Hoover-minded economic advisers have created inflation, recession and decline, all at once,yet top business leaders are all for him, just as they all hated Roosevelt in the '30s when he was saving the free enterprise system.

We shall argue about this election for years. If the campaign had lasted another two weeks would Ford have won? If McCarthy had been on all the ballots would he have tipped it? In a squeaker like this practically every supporting group, and particularly the blacks, can claim they put Carter over.

We got a greeting from Ronald Reagan just before the election that further alerted us about Jimmy Carter. Addressing us as "Dear Friend," he confided, "I am terribly concerned that the liberals and left wing elements in our country are going to capture both the Congress and the White House this year." Then he made his revelation: "And make no mistake about it-Jimmy Carter is a liberal." He made these intimate disclosures to us just before the election, and in a postscript (in blue longhand) he generously offered to mail us his book if we contributed $15 to his new right wing action group in the next fortnight. Signed, "R. R."

It makes us wonder what will happen to the Grand Old Party. R. R. 's worst apprehensions have come true. Democrats control the Senate, House, most of the governorships, and the White House. The tough crew behind Reagan seems to be spearheaded by Richard Viguerie, the direct-mail specialist who was chief fundraiser for Wallace before Wallace supported Carter. Viguerie says "the Republican party is an institutional disaster."

There's a 10-week transition period now before peanut farmer Jimmy Carter takes the oath of office next January 20 on the steps of the Capitol, and it is one of the most interesting intervals in America's extraordinary government. In this long lag when nothing appears to happen, most parliamentary governments could call an election, go to the people, count the ballots and finish it-with a fortnight to spare. We don't hurry like that. Mr. Carter will appoint his liaison man with the White House on foreign affairs, very likely the next Secretary of State. He will watch the economic

PSC Jaunt

Here's this week's hot tip: our informant tells us that Public Service Commission commissioners, staff and friends are leaving on an Hawaiian trip November 12, ostensibly to attend a national convention of regulatory utility commissioners. They plan to spend nine days, returning November 21. The anonymous caller tells us that the state "will wind up paying for the whole kit and kaboodle."

PSC director of administrative services J.H. Still confirmed Tuesday that Commissioners Abney A. Smith and J. Lewis Moss will make the Hawaiian trip, accompanied by PSC general counsel Mack Kaminski and W.H. Gooding, assistant director of the utilities division. Melissa Humphries, Moss' personal secretary, will go along to take notes. Will the Commission be footing the bill, we asked Still? "As far as its allowable by state law," he replied. We'll be watching those vouchers.

Mr. Peanut Eyes Trotters Shoals

Even though polls taken after last week's presidential election indicate that many voters continue to deem Jimmy Carter "fuzzy" on the issues, there is at least one instance where the choice between the uppity peanut farmer and Gerald Ford was a sharp, delineated one: the environment.

Carter's ascension to the throne has been jubilantly greeted in environmental circles. Throughout the campaign, Carter repeated his claim that if it came down to a choice between unrestricted development and destruction of the environment on the one hand, and economic growth on the other, he would side with the environment on every count. Soon it will be time to put up or shut up.

For South Carolinians concerned about their state's natural resources, there are three major projects where Carter can help provide immediate relief, as outlined in a recent story by the Greenville News' Washington correspondent, John Conlow:

(1) The Barnwell nuclear fuel reprocessing plant. Carter would convert the controversial plant into an international facility that would produce low-yield uranium capable of fueling reactors, but would be precluded from producing anything having to do with nuclear weapons. In general, Carter is against the unrestrained development of nuclear power and its various components, such as the "breeder" reactor.

(2) Off-shore oil drilling. Carter will likely support a version of the Hollings' offshore oil leasing bill which was defeated by a small margin in the House last year. The bill, if passed, would give South Carolina and other states that face possible off-shore drilling the opportunity to help the federal government prepare the leasing agreements with oil companies. The bill will also provide for an "oil spill liability fund" which would help state's raise the money when the oil companies mess up the coastline, which is sure to happen when the off-shore drilling begins within a few years.

(3) Trotters Shoals. The controversial Richard B. Russell Dam on the Savannah River below Abbeville, which will dam up one of the few remaining segments of wild river in the state, may feel the crunch in Carter's new budget proposals. About $10 million has been authorized on the dam, a pet project of former Third District Congressman Bryan Dorn and his successor, Butler Derrick. But the skyrocketing costs of the project, once estimated at less than $100 million, are now in the $250 million neighborhood, and Carter said in a recent speech on the campaign trail, "the federal government's dam building program is coming to an end." No one knows if the end is near enough to preclude finishing the Russell Dam, but South Carolina environmentalists are gearing up for a major effort to help that possibility along. "Now that the Congaree Swamp has been saved," said Brion Blackwelder, head of the S.C. Environmental Coalition, recently, "we've turned all our attention to Trotters Shoals. And so is the public. We've had a very successful petition drive and have organizations pledged to stop the dam in every county to be affected."

Three strike out

At least three sports "personalities" put their reputations on the line for President Ford in the campaign--and have little or nothing to show for it.

The venerable Paul "Bear" Bryant, head football coach at the University of Alabama, endorsed Ford and appeared in Birmingham at a rally with the President in September. Carter won the state overwhelmingly on Nov. 2.

Meanwhile, Woody Hayes, head coach at Ohio State University, was up on the platform in Columbus, Ohio, in the final days of the campaign with the President. Carter won the state, considered a "must-win" for Ford by the political pros.

Finally there was Joe Garagiola, who has fashioned a televison career out of his quick ad libs and his inept record as a catcher with the St. Louis Cardinals and the Pittsburgh Pirates. Joe was so omnipresent around the Ford campaign in the Final Days that reporters were calling the Republican team the "Ford-Garagiola ticket." But even with nine million dollars of advertising in the closing 14 days of the campaign, much of it featuring Joe, along with marching bands, the Stars and Stripes, orange juice and little puppy dogs, Ford suffered defeat nonetheless.

One thing that can be said for Jerry, however, is that he takes defeat better than his newfound pal, Woody Hayes. After losing the Rose Bowl for the last couple of years, Woody has punched photographers, avoided his players, and then cursed reporters and made an ass of himself in general. Ford just politely conceded that he had lost. But then, it wasn't the Rose Bowl, only an election. Right, Woody?

The real side of unionism

Nov. 8, 1976

To the editors:

First, a public service suggestion: Have Ed Meadows' column subheaded "to be taken with a pound (or more) of salt."

He seems to talk from a political position, ignoring the facts. For example, ("The Evils of 14B," Osceola, Nov. 5, 1976) when the Horsmann Doll Co. moved to South Carolina, one of their stated reasons was that the unions ever-escalating demands for wage increases had driven the company to the verge of bankruptcy in New Jersey.

He should really take a very close look at what unions really are and how they operate in real life instead of listening to Galbraithian vaporings.

Here is an example of real world trade unionism: The time is the fall of 1943. The place is Camp Forrest, near Manchester, Tenn. I have just started school, and have a bunch of new friends. One of their fathers is a carpenter by trade. He is forced to join a union to get work at Camp Forrest (which is still in the process of being built). He is allowed to work long enough to pay his union dues, then laid off. Others are hired, allowed to work, laid off. When his dues come due again, he is re-hired for long enough to pay them, laid off again, etc.

Again, I suggest that Mr. Meadows take a close look at unions in the real world. I suggest that the construction unions who have done such a good job of expanding the economy by expanding their salaries to the point that contractors can't build a house that the average person can afford would be a good place to start.

Correction

In last week's story on the South Carolina congressional races, "Meanwhile in Congress...," the total votes cast for President Ford in the Second District was erroneously recorded as 60,000. The correct figure is 69,835. The paragraph in question should have read:

"In Spence's Second District, Carter received about 76,000 votes to Ford's 69,800. Spence took 76,000 to Livingston's 58,000. In other words, there were roughly 11,000 voters who chose not to vote in the Congressional race, most of whom appear to have been Democrats unfamiliar with Livingston. So it breaks down this way: with the Carter pull in the Second District, a number of Democrats--Earle Morris, for example--would have been assured of about 69,000 votes to Spence's 76,000. With the right campaign organization, party hindsighters say, a strong Democrat could have turned the trick."

The POLITICAL ECONOMY by Ed Meadows

The sweetest victory

Let me say it again: Jimmy Carter won. No sweeter victory could obtain. He swept the South and took the industrial North and left the Republicans in the worst shambles they've been in since the start of the century. The ironies are delectible. Greatest of these is the fact that black people got to elect a white Southerner president. Second only is the irony of the coalitions. While blacks, organized labor, working class whites and upper middle class Southern liberals went in Carter's camp, a number of Northern liberals, whose provincial biases made them spurn Carter, were left holding an empty bag with the Republicans, as were a few Southern liberals who took their political instructions from the trendsetters of greater literary New York.

The Republicans mutter despairingly of how narrow a victory it was, but in perspective, it wasn't so narrow at all. In the first place, Carter won a larger popular majority than Nixon in 1968 or Kennedy in 1960. And down through American history, our presidential elections have always been close, except under the rare circumstances of a depression (Roosevelt's election) or a war hero coming home (Eisenhower's election) or of one candidate painted as a wild radical (Nixon over McGovern in '72). When all the votes were counted, Carter had a solid 4 per cent lead in the popular vote and got 297 electoral votes to Ford's 241. That's not a thin margin.

In the aftermath, with what untold pleasure does one such as myself watch the resident Republican gurus and prophets squirm like the proverbial prostitute in church. The editorial writers first whine philosophically and the next day blame the voters for being so lazy and ignorant as to pull the Democratic lever. The day afterward, they blame the outcome on Communistic brainwashing. Their misery is palpable. Think of all the words wasted lying for Gerald Ford, distorting the news for Gerald Ford, shilling for the Republican cause with every trick of the con man. And for what? Total repudiation. In South Carolina, not only did Carter sweep the state, but he carried almost all Democratic candidates with him, and Democrats took over the government of Columbia. They won every seat on the Richland County Council. It was a forceful and eloquent rejection of everything that the State newspaper and the Record and ETV and channel ten have stood for and advertised in their Republican propaganda. Someday these Republican ideologues may be forced, in the darkness of night, in their nocturnal solitude, to ponder their misguided ways. They might have cause to wonder how they could have been so out of step with the majority of the American people. Hah! Instead, they rationalize it away. They make cheap excuses.

> "...If Carter owes anything to anyone, he owes it to the nation's black people, to labor, and to poor whites..."

Of course, they did everything they could, and they had much assistance from the television networks. Naturally every candidate complains about his treatment at the hands of the media, but Carter is correct to note that he got the worse coverage. Many reporters, after all, are up from the working classes, and they are wont to be overly impressed by the trappings of the presidency. Thus they handled candidate Gerald Ford with kid gloves. He was Mr. President, our ersatz royal highness. And there were commentators like Harry Reasoner who complained that Carter's Playboy interview wasn't a fit topic for a campaign discussion, but "Carter had made it one." Wrong, Harry. You made it one, by flashing it all over the television tube night after night. Carter was also interviewed by Business Week, among other magazines, yet nobody ever reported on those interviews.

But now Mr. Carter is our president-elect. He'll be our youngest president since Kennedy and the first president to be a rock music fan (he has close ties with the Allman Brothers and that branch of Southern progressive rock out of Capricorn Records in Macon, Ga.) He'll of necessity be a president of those who have been neglected for the past eight years. (If Carter owes anything to anyone, he owes it to the nation's black people, to labor, and to poor whites. He owes a certain debt to New York, which brought him near to victory Tuesday night, and to the black people of Mississippi, who put Carter over the top late in the night of Tuesday's election.) Carter is even acknowledged by his enemies to be a very intelligent man, a confident, aggressive leader, who yet listens to the counsel of other people. Perhaps he won't be perfect, but he does promise to be a competent president.

And not a moment too soon, either. Just a few days after the election, new economic statistics were released, showing wholesale prices up for the third month, and unemployment up again just a micrometer under 8 per cent. Which is to say, we're still in a recession. Brookings Institution search for members of the national press elite quickly produced two individuals wearing Rolling Stone press credentials; they were John Belushi and Dan Ackroyd, both actors on NBC's "Saturday Night." Ackroyd is best known for his impersonation of Jimmy Carter. We also spotted Curtis Wilke, a native of Mississippi and political correspondent for the Boston Globe. Wilke recently led a reporters' food riot on the Carter press plane, allegedly flinging egg rolls and leading his associates in the chant, "No more swill." Other members of the press corps--their nerves frayed at the end of a long campaign--quickly joined in. Reporters from the New York Times arrived, three of them, looking like identical gray pin-striped pigeons, carrying identical typewriters. They seemed to be walking in step, but it was late when we saw them. We could have been mistaken.

All this activity was brewing on the privileged third level, where crowds circled the mezzanine, ducked into rooms to watch returns on giant TV screens, listened to a limp bluegrass band, danced in the disco room, ate free food from the buffet, drank at cash bars. The bad staggerers, the glassy-eyed, the shouters, were relegated to the ground floor; the very drunk on the $100 level had wives or other women discreetly propping them up as they teetered from one television viewing area to another.

Television sets were as pervasive as alcohol. Some screens on the $100 level were six feet square, those on the ground floor were even larger. As the Center's street level became jammed with Carter well-wishers, something curious happened on the upper levels. Any information about surly crowds outside the building or overcrowding inside was quickly blotted from the television screens, probably as a method of rumor control. And given the hysterical bent of most of Atlanta's TV press, the censorship was probably wise. Atlanta Police Commissioner Reginald Evans would appear on screen and begin: "We have a potentially dangerous situa....," then the television would screech, squawk and flip to another channel.

There were cops everywhere, cops and secret service people. Most of the huge crowd was drinking and the security people were apprehensive. The cops checked purses, coat pockets and liners, turned people away at the doors, and kept an eye on particularly boisterous drunks. But the security seemed inconsistent, almost capricious in its caution. We were swept up in a crunch of fast-moving Carter staffers at one point. Caught in the crowd and curious, we trotted along, down escalators to the ground floor, through several doors and to the side of the main stage where we stopped in an area bounded by two sets of ropes and a line of state troopers. Supposedly, only the Carter staff were allowed close to the podium, but we passed unchallenged under the eyes of an SS man. It wasn't until we were milling around within tight boundaries that I realized we were providing what the security people wanted--bodies, bodies enough to build a retaining wall of flesh between the rest of the crowd and the corridor where Jimmy Carter would walk to the stage. If the crowd panicked, or rushed the president-elect, they would have to go through us. So we stood for two hours between a line of state troopers and the crowd at our backs.

By 4:30 a.m., it was over. Carter won Mississippi, CBS flashed CARTER ELECTED on the screen, the other networks followed suit, and people who had been drifting out of the World Congress Center came roaring back onto the main floor for Carter's speech. I was within 40 feet of the stage but I could see nothing of Carter. I watched the speech through the back of a television camera. As we were leaving,Carter, Rosalynn and Amy were fading, in color, from the big screen at the back of the hall.

At 5 a.m. I walked out into the cold, shook off the excitement that was beginning to cramp my muscles and hailed a cab. Anxiety settled down in the backseat, too, as the enormity of what had happened sank in. Who was this man I and 30,000 others had been cheering: the man for whom we had waited all night, the man for whom I had voted? Whoever he was, he would soon be president. I saw no reassurances that Carter was much more than a consummate pol, a Southerner with quirky fate, effective public relations and good advisors. During the night I had acted not directly but with forced detachment, building a careful neutrality. In fact, I was really afraid---afraid of the crowd, afraid of the drunkeness of victory, of Carter, afraid of my willingness to believe, of my need to believe, of what would happen if each of us in the crowd had unleashed those fears into the victorious atmosphere. I don't even know how I would have stated fear to another person, a stranger, without being taken for a lunatic. But it would have been an important move. As it was, everything moved away in a flickering electronic dream.

I was addicted to the night; I couldn't resist cutting on the TV at home for one more look at Carter going home to Plains. The immediate impact was visceral: the tableau of southern faces behind the president-elect was overwhelming. There were his friends and neighbors, and especially Carter's brother Billy, obviously uncomfortable, hands sunk deep in the pockets of an old hunting jacket. As Carter began with the pol's smile, the pol's camaraderie which passes for sincerity, I reached to turn off the set. Then something happened and the TV, which had yielded only distant images, was close with nuance.

It was a simple sequence: Carter paused in his speech, glanced around the stage, hugged his wife, and cried. But in the silence, as he paused and looked around, in the space which enveloped him on the crowded stage, he was a man staring into the void, acknowledging his terror simply because he could not avoid it. I would like to extend that instant, play it out, say that I did more than look squarely at the awful possibilities too; that along with the president-elect I allowed protective veneer to crack. But I can't say that. The instant was transitory, even in its connectiveness. The instant was enough. It was the most important televised moment of silence since Richard Nixon cleared his throat and began his resignation speech. ■ economists now warn that the slowdown is proceeding at a frightening pace throughout the world.

Now one of the brightest prospects of the Carter administration is that Lawrence W. Klein of the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School will replace Alan Greenspan. Klein, much in contrast to Ford's economic advisor, ranks high in the economics profession. He developed the complex econometric models now used for economic forecasting, models which contain hundreds of equations depicting the behavior of the national economy. And if any economist knows anything about the national economy and macroeconomic policy, it is likely to be an economist such as Klein, who has spent 15 years studying in detail how the aggregate economy works, in his effort to find equations predicting overall economic behavior. Carter could not have chosen a more qualified economist to minister over the ailments of our economy. Klein is as qualified as they come, a macroeconomist who's made lasting contributions to the science. One cannot study advanced econometrics or statistics without considering Klein's advances in those fields. By comparison, Greenspan is a fifth-rater of no distinction.

Elected into office with Carter is the most liberal Democratic Congress of the century. As soon as it takes office in January, the new Congress is expected to cooperate closely with Carter, as he moves quickly to kindle an economic recovery with the now-discussed tax cut; with incentives for private business to hire more people; and with jobs programs for those people business won't hire. Unemployment in this nation has been well above 7 per cent, where it is today. This is outlandish. And those who claim that any reduction will bring wild inflation forget that 15 to 20 per cent of the nation's industrial machinery sits idle.

The months ahead offer brilliant promise of new efforts to heal the nation's wounds, wounds which have festered for eight long years.

indicators and the stock market. He will roam around for his cabinet; Eisenhower picked his cabinet by December 1; Nixon, December 11; Kennedy, December 17.

The President-elect may announce that his cabinet will be available to answer questions in Congress. Fritz Mondale recommended this before he ever thought of running for Vice President, in his book The Accountability of Power. And Jimmy Carter (we are reminded by Professor Philippa Strum, of Brooklyn College) said the same thing in his Why Not the Best: "I believe that it would be helpful here to have members of the cabinet appear before joint sessions of the Congress to answer written and verbal questions, preferably with live television coverage for the whole nation to view." We shall see.

The most interesting thing for Washington-and for the nation of course-is whether Jimmy Carter can handle his new job, or will blow it. There have been only three times like this in the century, as we figure-an activist liberal President, a big majority in Congress of his own party, and a huge pile-up of backed up social needs. Wilson was the first; FDR second; Kennedy-Johnson third. For 14 of the past 22 years there has been divided government in Washington. This includes the last eight. The economy is in such shape that Lawrence Klein, Carter's top economic adviser, say it shouldn't wait until January 20 for federal stimulus. What happens? Maybe the election was dull; it should pick up from here on.

ATLANTIC I THEATRE, 3220 Two Notch Road, 786-0790

These theatres move to a solid porn bill with "Teenage Sex Thearapy" and "Love Lips" in number one and:

ATLANTIC II THEATRE, 3220 Two Notch Road, 786-0790

"The Second Coming of Eva" and "The Sex Clinic." All are X. Shows start at 1:15.

CAROLINA THEATRE, 1323 Main Street, 252-8011

"Mansion of the Doomed." New scare show -- looks to be low budget. Rated R. 1:40, 3:30, 5:20, 7:10, and 9 with the matinees dropping during the week.

COLUMBIA EAST I THEATRE, 7369 Garner's Ferry Road, 776-0350

"Two Minute Warning." Mad sniper terrorizes the L.A. Coliseum in another disaster-style movie that should be just that. Charlton Heston is on hand to save the day and John Cassavetes, Marilyn Hasset, Jack Klugman, Gena Rowlands, David Jansen, and Walter Pidgeon get saved. Rated PG. Call about the showtimes.

COLUMBIA EAST II THEATRE, 7369 Garner's Ferry Road, 252-8011

"Outlaw Josey Wales." Clint Eastwood's latest moves out to east Columbia. 2:30, 5:30, and 8:30; the afternoon showings are for the weekend only.

DUTCH SQUARE NORTH THEATRE, Dutch Square Mall, 798-1110

"Two Minute Warning." It's here likewise. Call.

DUTCH SQUARE SOUTH THEATRE, Dutch Square Mall, 798-1110

"The Gnomemobile" continues. It's earlier Disney business starring Walter Brennan and Keenan Wynn. 1:30, 3:15, 5, 6:45, and 8:30.

FOX THEATRE, 1607 Main Street, 254-5212

"Ape." Giant ape takes on a killer shark in what looks to be an execrable exploitation pic. Made in Korea. PG. 5:20, 7:10, and 9 with additional 1:40 and 3:30 shows on the weekend.

GAMECOCK I THEATRE, Parkland Plaza Shopping Center, 796-0022.

"The Ritz." The Broadway comedy about the goings on at a gay steam bath becomes a movie with Jack Weston and Rita Moreno. 1:15, 3:15, 5:15, 7:15, and 9:15.

GAMECOCK II THEATRE, Parkland Plaza Shopping Center, 796-0022

"The Magnificent Seven." Yul Brynner and Steve McQueen are the stars in this sixties Hollywood remake of Kurosawa's "The Seven Samurai." It has its partisans, but of marginal interest. 2:30, 5, 7:15, and 9:30. No matinees during the week.

JEFFERSON SQUARE THEATRE, Jefferson Square, Downtown, 254-6731

"The Man Who Fell To Earth." A seemingly androgynous alien lands on the Earth in order to find water to take back to his planet, but when his spaceship malfunctions he must sell his scientific secrets to exploitative businessmen. David Bowie stars in Nicholas Roeg's latest, which has gotten mixed reviews. Rated R. Call about feature times.

MIRACLE THEATRE, 1228 Main Street, 256-1950

"Marathon Man." This Robert Evans - John Schlesinger has all the usual elements of current suspense movies — violence, chases, a victimized hereo — but it takes itself entirely too seriously; there's no suggestion of anyone having fun making this nonsense up and so the sudden, graphic, and almost casual violence becomes revoltingly affectless, the performances, by Roy Scheider, Marthe Keller, William Devane, and Laurence Olivier, cold and lifeless. Practically the only traces of personality in the movie are supplied by Dustin Hoffman and writer William Goldman, both of whom are merely repeating their all too familiar methods. The plot is about a grad student (Hoffman) pusued and tortured by an ex-Nazi (Olivier) and his band. 2:15, 4:45, 7:15 and 9:45. PG.

PALMETTO THEATRE, 1417 Main Street, 254-5800

"Norman, Is That You?" If you like Redd Fox, Pearl Bailey and lots of gay jokes then it could be your kind of picture — about two parents who visit their son in L. A. and find that he's changed preferences. 3, 5, 7, and 9 with no matinees during the week.

PLAZA III THEATRE, 1223 Main Street, 254-7960

"Car Wash." Black musical set in a car wash with sketches and lots of characters. Richard Pryor, George Carlin, Professor Irwin Corey, Garrett Morris. PG. 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9 — the two early shows for the weekend only.

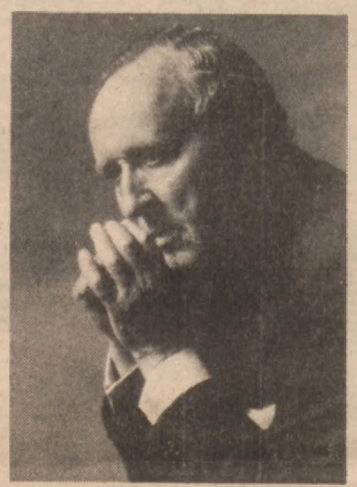
RICHLAND MALL I THEATRE, Richland Mall, 782-2228

"The Cars that Eat People." We know zip about this PG rated sci-fi film, but from the title it could be a spoof? 3, 5, 7, and 9, with no matinees during the week. The late show here on the 12th and 13th will be "Groupies."

RICHLAND MALL II THEATRE, Richland Mall, 782-2228

"Shout at the Devil." The corporate thinkers at American International seem to have crossed "King Solomon's Mines" with "The African Queen" for an adventure movie billed, not surprisingly, as the most spectacular ever. With Roger Moore and Barbara Parkins in the cast, don't expect such spectacular performances, although Lee Marvin and Ian Holm are also on hand. It's about sabateurs fighting the Germans during World War I.

MUSIC



Daniel Ericourt

The Columbia Museum of Art will be bringing in Daniel Ericourt as the second soloist in its concert series. Ericourt is a major European pianist who is considered the foremost living exponent of Debussy's music. The recital is open free to the public on Sunday, Nov. 14 in the Trustees Gallery of the Museum at 3 p.m.

Earth, Wind and Fire will be coming to the Carolina Coliseum on Saturday, November 13th, at 8 p.m. Tickets are $8.50 each, available from the Coliseum and associated outlets. The Coliseum will also be bringing in Aerosmith on Sunday, Nov. 21st. Tickets will be $6.50 in advance, $7.50 day of show. Eastwood's latest moves out to east

The Columbia Lyric Theatre will also be opening its new season this month with a performance of Mozart's "Cosi Fan Tutte" on Nov. 17 and 19 at Playhouse 4 at Fort Jackson. William J. Moody is the producer/conductor; tickets are $4.50 and $2.50; and performances will begin at 8:15 p.m.

THEATRE

"West Side Story," the Leonard Bernstein-Stephen Sondheim musical adaptation and updating of "Romeo and Juliet," will be performed by the Camden Community Theatre November 11 through the 13th. Tickets are $3 adults, $1.50 students. Call 432-0473 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday. The performance is at Pine Tree Hill School at 8 p.m.

Clemson's University Players will present Jean Giraudoux's "The Madwoman of Chaillot" beginning Nov. 15 and running through the 20th. It's about an eccentric old lady out to save Paris from greedy oil companies. The performances will be at 8 p.m. in Daniel Hall Auditorium.

The 10th annual convention of the South Carolina Theatre Association will be held at Sumter on Nov. 12th through the 14th. Sponsored by the Sumter Little Theatre and USC-Sumter, the convention is designed for workshops, demonstrations, and discussions on the latest theatrical techniques. Guest artist will be stage and movie actor Tony Roberts. Registration begins 2 p.m., Friday, the 12th.

One of the South's most famous dance groups, "The Atlanta Contemporary Dance Co.," will perform at Winthrop College on Monday, Nov. 15 at 8 p.m. in Byrnes Auditorium. This six-member group, which has danced in touring programs sponsored by the National Endowment For the Arts, has a repertory that includes modern dance, jazz and mime with music ranging from Brahms to mountain songs. Tickets are $5 and $3, on sale at Byrnes box office the day of the show.

ART

Weavers and sculptors interested in producing art works for new federal buildings should submit information on their work to the South Carolina Arts Commission by Dec. 1, 1976. The Commission plans to submit a portfolio of work by
